THE VILLAGE OF THE EMACIATED GOGO

prayer. During prayer they had the grace to bow their heads and close their eyes, and when I said 'Amen' they too repeated it with a lively snap as though they endorsed my prayer and wished its fulfilment. Finally we struggled through the Lord's Prayer and dispersed; they to a hut in the village to spend a couple of hours singing their native songs accompanied by clapping and dancing, though whether heathen or not I could not detect.

Mahiagogo has thus begun the ascent; its young people approaching the missionary for prayer of their own accord, which was much better than my calling them together for that purpose, for, in such spontaneity there is life. Has the 'praying' at last caught the imagination of the folks at Mahiagogo? Of its young people—certainly. And therein there is hope, and thus, even in the few years that remain to me of missionary service in Madagascar, I now anticipate seeing a live Church at Mahiagogo, for the young people are quickly picking up the Marofotsy dialect, when fuller instruction can proceed.

Yesterday morning I had thought the 'cause' quite dead. Last night I was to discover that there was life in the 'corpse.' In my twenty-six years in Madagascar I have never known a Church to die or the people of the most benighted village not to awake eventually, for Christ is irresistible and invincible.

Kendall Gale Memorial Fund

A Memorial Fund, to perpetuate the memory of Kendall Gale and to forward the work which he founded in Northern Madagascar, has been opened at the offices of the London Missionary Society, Broadway, Westminster, London, S.W., to which contributions may be sent.

Many of our readers who have so often read with interest the articles by Kendall Gale which appeared in WORLD DOMINION will be interested to know that a booklet has been published by the London Missionary Society, entitled, Kendall Gale—Pioneer Missionary in North Madagascar, 1908–1935. It is written by the Rev. Harold A. Ridgwell, who was his colleague for over twenty years, as a tribute of affection and esteem. (Post paid 4½d.)
