public debate with a Seventh-Day Adventist, and the priest, after great loss of face, came to the conclusion that it was time for him to get to know something of the contents of the Bible. Simple men and women perceive that a Church, if moved by hatred and malice, is in no position to speak to a world plagued by the same maladies. The distribution of the Scriptures alone has, during the past year, brought light and life, joy and peace of heart, love and spiritual emancipation, to many. And by so much is Rumania the richer, for whatever modern science may invent, whether for our convenience or our destruction, we believe that, in the long run, righteousness will still exalt a nation and that 'the law of the wise is a fountain of life to depart from the snares of death.'

Refugees in England

At the end of March, 1939, there were 19,053 Jewish refugees in England, consisting of 8,371 men, 6,278 women, and 4,404 (or fewer) children.

Some 22,000 to 23,000 refugees have arrived in England since the Nazi régime, but many have passed on, and probably from 11,000 to 12,000 of employable age are left. A considerable number of refugees had, some years ago, taken the precaution of investing their capital in England. Some of these have now opened factories in this country, and it is calculated that they are employing some 15,000 persons in England who were previously unemployed.

Among the various relief organizations, the International Hebrew Christian Alliance is grappling with the problem of relief for persecuted and refugee Hebrew Christians along the following lines: direct relief to individuals in Germany and outside; maintenance of two refugee hostels in London, where refugees can stay, awaiting emigration visas, or from which they can pass into employment; the furnishing of passage and landing money for overseas settlement. Refugees to ten different countries have received this help recently, five of which are in Latin America. The re-training of refugees for agriculture in connection with the scheme maintained by the Society of Friends, and also in Sweden, is being maintained. The education of doctors and missionaries at various colleges is being assisted. One of the principal needs is to devise various means for caring for aged refugees. The children are fairly well looked after and there are already about four thousand in the British Isles.
